Sources Sought Notices

Sources Sought Notices are posted in FedBizOpps (FBO) – the single government entry point for federal government procurement opportunities over $25,000. The number of Sources Sought notices appearing has been on the rise. An FBO search of these notices posted in the last 30 days shows 1,743 results. What is a Sources Sought and should you respond to them? This edition of the eBusiness newsletter will address these topics.

What is a Sources Sought Notice?

FBO defines a Sources Sought Notice as "a synopsis posted by a government agency that states they are seeking possible sources for a project. It is not a solicitation for work, nor is it a request for proposal". The Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) 5.201(c) states "The primary purposes of the notice are to improve small business access to acquisition information and enhance competition by identifying contracting and subcontracting opportunities."

Simply put, a Sources Sought Notice is the government's way of identifying the interests and capabilities of the marketplace by requesting specific information prior to the release of a solicitation. They are primarily used as market research to determine if there is potential for a contract to be set aside for small business or other small business set-aside programs.

Is a Sources Sought Notice different than a Request for Information (RFI)?

FAR Part 15.201(e) states that RFIs may be used when the Government does not presently intend to award a contract, but wants to obtain price, delivery, other market information, or capabilities for planning purposes. Responses to these notices are not offers and cannot be accepted by the Government to form a binding contract.

Sources Sought Notices and RFI's are often used interchangeably. An advanced search in FBO for Sources Sought Notices under the section titled "Opportunity/Procurement Type" will include RFI's.

Should you Respond to Sources Sought Notices?

Yes! But first take the time to identify those that are a good fit for your business. Depending on the information requested, responding can be an investment of time. This investment, however, can pay off in having the contract set aside for small business or even potentially create a sole source opportunity. Formally responding to a sources sought notice creates the opportunity to follow up with the point of contact and offer your suggestions on performing the work. It may also state in the notice that only those companies that submitted responses to the source sought may submit a response if a solicitation is issued.

How do you Respond to a Sources Sought Notice?

Each Sources Sought Notice is different so you must carefully read the notice to know how to respond. It is important to respond exactly as requested – do not provide any more or less information. Some notices will require very little in response such as company name, address, DUNS number, NAICS, and business size (Small, 8(a), HUBZone, Woman, Service Disabled Veteran, etc.) while others will ask for very detailed information. Many will require sending a capability statement so you should have one prepared that you can tailor to specific notices as needed. Samples of varying degrees of information requested are on the following page.
